WEST END POETRY FESTIVAL - VIRTUAL

Sponsored by the Town of Carrboro & Coordinated by the Carrboro Poets Council

Wednesday, October 14th - Saturday, October 17th

Watch and be a part of the most unique poetry event in NC! The 15th Annual West End Poetry Festival will feature some of the Southeast’s most talented poets while celebrating the many exciting and varied poetic styles. The festival provides a setting where poets can engage, share, and encourage the reading, writing, and listening of poetry.

All events are free and open to all ages.

Talking to Myself One

It’s a priority now to talk to myself first. People I love want me to do as they say, but I hold them off. “Say whatever you like, but first, I must talk to myself.” Funny, how my authority dims as I add years. Sometimes I have to stand up and fight. Then go off in a corner and think what I’d better do. My plan worked out. All that money went to fix my car. New tires, new hoses, new steering column fluid. $800 gone in a flash, but my truck works again. When my ex-husband came to visit, I got quiet. I’d been miserable in that marriage. He said his family did too much harm so he would stay away so he couldn’t do any. I never knew he felt that way. He seemed happy to meet his grandchildren, to see me and offer to help. “What can I do?” “Nothing. Make yourself at home.” But as I gathered plates, he took them out of my hands. He wanted to hug me. “I’ll be gone when you come out of the bathroom,” he said. But he was still here as they set up his phone to get him back to his motel. Maybe he wanted to get lost. The grandchildren want him to return, and maybe he will.
Autumn creeps into the mountains, nature dips her paintbrush into a bucket of gold and highlights the walnut leaves.

The morning sun shimmies through the tree-filtered light, three white-tailed deer munch in the cornfield.

On Brasstown Bald, the buzzing of cicadas, males shake their drums, each makes its own song.

Red-eyed with greenish marking, the female bores into twigs and lays her eggs: cicadas saw their fiddles!
Gift on a Drumlin’

Evening time in Cashel while Father slept
I journeyed out without a plan.
Along the way, a young lady dressed in white was heading home during the dusk of night.
Why would I not stop and ask her gently
if a lift was what she needed to the farm of family.

Soon, sitting at the kitchen table, just us three.
Her Dad, herself and curious me.
Up front, I mentioned I was most content with bride and family.
Several hours on, I left aware that I must be back to the Cashel former Presbyterian monastery, a B and B for my Dad at dawn, patiently waiting for me.

A wagon of sorts rested by the side of the hiway with a weathered man, a traveler by himself, alone with a comforting familiar fire.
Had to stop and visit just awhile,
up the hiway from the monastery about one mile.
We chatted and as the sun began its rise
I soon returned to my Dad’s surprise.

We headed towards Caherseveen for eggs, a biscuit, coffee...
Approaching this historical town a drumlin came into view.
My ’well versed travelling friend was there to teach me
once again, something new.
We just respectfully sat together and as I’m now passed his age when we were one.
We sat on this drumlin where I acquired, again,
authentic knowledge from Father to son...

Father’s Day 2020
You wake, hair matted with forgotten dreams,
Slapping the alarm clock to sleep, annoyed.
The sting of yesterday sits heavy in your stomach
Sour with ice cream and lemonade you gorged
Yourself like it was your last day.
You don’t wake me as our morning breath
Pools between us mingling into a new life
Loud with stench of comfort food long
Undigested like the debate over bad politics.

The Orange Lady

Oh, October!
You put on a show
tap dancing over the hills
dressed in bright garments of orange, lemon, and cranberry.

Oh, October!
You are a sassy month
stopping carloads of folks
flocking to view fall foliage:
you somersault on the wind.

Oh, October!
You are a naughty child.
On Halloween you deck
out in spooky costumes,
trick-or-treat through the night.

Aubade?

You wake, hair matted with forgotten dreams,
Slapping the alarm clock to sleep, annoyed.
The sting of yesterday sits heavy in your stomach
Sour with ice cream and lemonade you gorged
Yourself like it was your last day.
You don’t wake me as our morning breath
Pools between us mingling into a new life
Loud with stench of comfort food long
Undigested like the debate over bad politics.
Heirlooms of All Sorts

We stop for heirlooms at Dean’s Farm Market on a melted-jelly, August afternoon for down-home makings of Low Country comfort food. My mind’s compass returns to South Carolina suppers, seed pearls tightly stitched to my soul, a signet of tatted tastes and textures.

Saliva seeped through a corner of Grandmother Pearl’s mouth, turned down from Bell’s Palsy, at the sight of a mess of Choppee Okra, purple hulled Crowder peas, butter beans.

Granny would sit in slatted chair on wrap-around porch, shell into the strainer, then tote all to kitchen to rinse, season, simmer, summon neighbor Cottingham to supper with her and sister Lynda, ladle onto Golden Wheat patterned plates, savor until every spoonful of pot liquor was sopped up with cast-iron cornbread, leaving “the best left for last.”

The day-old French lentil salad with Romas, feta and cilantro I toted to the church picnic would confuse. But, both would know why I bought the market’s trademark heirloom ‘Hen Peck’ collards with salt pork to carry along. The first frost is still some time away.
Absence

His absence haunts at the start and finish of my day. Leaving the house, there’s no need to turn on the radio. Away, I do not have to watch my time and may delay. At my door, I expect the charge of a small white body. I turn the key and find the rug unrumbled. I go into my office to check my messages. There is no dog following at my heels. I go into my bedroom to comb my hair. He is not there to jump onto the bed to watch, To beg to have his white coat combed and brushed. There will be no long white hair to brush and comb, For, I took Bogey to have him groomed today.

If by life you were deceived. (L.1) that which passes will be dear... (I.9)

Pushkin...1799-1837.*

Delving deeply into the journey of such an unkind piece of one’s life where despair simply will just not go away out of nowhere deceit and deception appear, attacking, eliminating any feel for joy one must move the sadness to the rear grasp onto hope spiting what some note is caused by fear.
Who watches the watchmen?

"Quis custodiet ipsos custodes" - "Who will guard the guardians?"

The ceremony of innocence is drowned. WB Yeats. Second Coming

Who watches the mob,
who watches the police,
the politicians, the mayors, the governors,
the President, the Congress, and the Supreme Court?

Who watches the watchmen?

Who destroys the statues
and the monuments,
who kills the children,
who kills the black men,
who brings the guilty to justice
who stops the black on black crime who prevents the killing in the cities of this country?

"Who watches the watchers?"

When the mob takes power, when

Things fall apart, the center cannot hold;
Mere anarchy is loosed upon the world.
The blood-dimmed tide is loosed, and everywhere
The ceremony of innocence is drowned.

Who watches the watchmen?

What are the three estates of the realm?

What is the fourth estate?

Who watches the fourth estate?

"Who will guard the guards themselves?"

Judy Hogan’s Fall 2020 Creative Writing Class

September 14 - November 16, 2020 Mondays  7:00-9:00pm
Cost: $180 by Skype (to allow for mailing materials as needed)
For More Info: Call 919-545-9932 or judyhogan@mindspring.com.
Location: Skype

We’ll read selected poems from Wendell Berry’s New Selected Poems, and write our own poems. All will study by Skype.

“Judy Hogan is a wonderful poet and writer and a delightful teacher as well. I took her class this fall on Russian Poets and signed up again for next semester class too.

She has a great affinity for the Russian poets, and the ones she has chosen are pretty incredible. The format is that we read the poems aloud and analyze them for the first hour and, in the second hour, we read our own poems and analyze what works or doesn’t in them and why. She is very helpful and encouraging. The next class will be the third one I’ve taken from her. She has me very willingly hooked.” Pete MacDowell
